Jeff Blease is a “Bet the Company” litigator representing an impressive list of national and international clients in some of the most complex, prominent cases around the country. Industry leaders seek Jeff’s extraordinary experience in construction, insurance, real estate, business litigation, and major personal injury cases. Jeff has also represented public sector clients including counties, cities, school districts, and governmental entities. Jeff’s experience includes advising both plaintiffs and defendants, bringing perspective that informs critical legal strategies that win cases.

Jeff is lead counsel in jurisdictions spanning the U.S. He has tried over 35 cases to verdict across 26 state courts over the course of his 35-year career. He also handles arbitrations before various forums and has mediated hundreds of cases under the rules of several different organizations.

Known for his expansive construction practice, Jeff oversees over 40 dedicated construction attorneys handling both transactions and litigation. The team represents owners, national contractors, developers, engineers, subcontractors, and suppliers in virtually any construction-related matter across the country.

As a former full time firefighter and fire prevention education leader, Jeff understands the various fire and life safety codes and has the practical experience to provide strategic advice to clients facing challenges in those areas. Jeff advises manufactures on product recalls, engineering firms and contractors on liability issues in the fire detection, suppression and life safety space.

Clients choose Jeff for his strategic, business-minded approach to resolving sophisticated, and often enormous, legal disputes. Through his exposure to complex, large scale litigation, Jeff developed a tremendous skill for coordinating extensive case portfolios, managing upwards of 80 related cases simultaneously. Clients appreciate his unique skill in crafting and meeting legal budgets, allowing appropriate planning for the best possible outcomes. Jeff’s case management, staffing techniques, and articulate legal skills are second-to-none.

A leader within Foley & Lardner, Jeff is chair of the firm's nationally recognized construction practice and chairs the Partner Compensation Committee. He is also a former Management Committee member and the former chair of the San Diego office's litigation department.

Jeff is a seasoned trial lawyer and a skilled strategist. With dozens of trials across many jurisdictions in the United States, Jeff has a unique ability to adapt to the culture of the geographic location and forum to deliver winning strategies and arguments. Jeff has jury trial experience in multiple cases in state court across the states of California, Minnesota, Colorado and Oregon. He also has jury trial experience in the US District Court in California. He has extensive bench trial experience in many state courts and significant arbitration experience with AAA, JAMS and other private arbitration forums. Whether it is a jury trial, bench trial, single arbitrator or a panel of arbitrators, Jeff focuses on developing the theme and the strategy from day one which controls the development of the case and ultimately the trial. Jeff is nimble when assessing the strength of the themes developed during the case and often will change course if necessary in order to adopt the winning theme and strategy for trial.

Jeff enjoys taking on the most complex cases with highly technical subject matter and distilling it down to information the judge, jury or arbitrator can understand and embrace. He has tried cases involving geotechnical, electrical, mechanical, structural and hydraulic engineering; complex accounting issues; fire code and life safety issues; real property valuation; tax valuation; delay and disruption claims; differing site conditions; landslides, eminent domain and dozens of breach of contract and mechanic's lien cases. Whether it is a short cause bench trial or a six week jury trial, Jeff has navigated the client to success.
