Evan M. Hellman counsels high-growth companies and entrepreneurs in the health tech space, delivering practical, compliance, and transactional issues so that they can continue to move their businesses forward no matter what issues arise as their operations grow and evolve.

Evan advises on regulatory and transactional issues for a range of health care clients, including health-tech startups, major academic medical centers, community hospitals, nursing homes, physician groups, and other provider entities. His advice involves telemedicine and digital health operations, corporate practice of medicine compliance, scope of practice rules, licensing, permitting and change of ownership issues, fraud and abuse compliance, and HIPAA. Evan also advises clients on the development and operationalization of new business initiatives, governance, and transactional matters, including mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, and other strategic affiliations.

Real Industry Experience

Evan knows the demands and strategic goals of venture-backed health care companies, as well as their investors. Prior to joining Foley, Evan spent three years as general counsel for Vault Health, Inc. Evan was with the company from the earliest stage. Beginning his role when the company was just a slide deck with three employees, helping it grow to over 450 people and offering services across the country. As the company's chief legal advisor, he counseled the CEO and C-suite, the board of directors, and downstream departmental stakeholders across the company. He was integral in advising the business to launch its initial men's health services and its expansion to nationwide COVID testing and clinical trial operations. Tackling the full spectrum of legal issues, including health care regulatory, venture financing, M&A, employment, real estate, government contracting, and strategic business development opportunities, Evan knows what drives health tech entrepreneurs to succeed and the issues they face when growing a business to scale.
